5、下表是 2021 年对美国大学生和中国大学生经济来源的调查, 请根据表中信息写一篇调查报告。(The form below illustrates financial sources based on a survey of American college students and Chinese college students. Please write a report according to the table...)

According to the survey, American college students are more likely to self-fund their education with 55% relying on their own finances, while only 20% of Chinese students can self-fund their education. Chinese students, on the other hand, rely heavily on family support with 60% of them receiving financial assistance from their families, compared to 25% of American students. Scholarships and part-time jobs are less common for both groups of students and are only relied on by a small percentage.

The difference in the financial sources of American and Chinese college students can be attributed to several factors. The first factor is the difference in the economic development level of the two countries. The United States has a more developed economy, which allows more American students to self-fund their education. In contrast, China's economy is still developing, and many families cannot afford the high cost of college tuition.

The second factor is the difference in education systems. In the United States, scholarships and part-time jobs are more readily available to students, which can help cover the cost of tuition and living expenses. Chinese universities, however, do not offer many scholarship opportunities, and students generally have less time for part-time jobs due to the demanding nature of their studies.

In conclusion, the survey shows that American and Chinese college students have different financial sources for their education. The difference is mainly due to the economic development level and education systems of the two countries. It is important for policymakers and educators to consider these factors when developing policies and programs to support college students financially.
